Door County Land Trust Announces Partnership Restoration Project at the Bay Shore Blufflands Nature Preserve

Sturgeon Bay, WI: The Door County Land Trust, in partnership with Bay Shore Property Owners Association, begins a multi-year restoration and buckthorn eradication effort on the Bay Shore Blufflands Nature Preserve, 5454 Bay Shore Drive, just south of Carlsville Road (between Sturgeon Bay and Egg Harbor). The Bay Shore Blufflands Buckthorn Blast will kick-off on September 1, 9:30-11:30 a.m., as a community gathering open to the public with short presentations on invasive species and the unique geology of the preserve, educational giveaways, several hikes throughout the morning and recruitment of stewardship volunteers.

Bay Shore Blufflands Nature Preserve protects 273 acres containing federally endangered plants, migratory bird nesting sites and high-quality wildlife habitat, and offers 2.5 miles of hiking trails that wind through open fields and young forest. Past disruption to the natural environment from roads, buildings and septic tanks has done its damage and created the opportunity for non-native, invasive intruders such as glossy buckthorn to take over.

Door County Land Trust Stewardship Manager Amanda Pyke says, "I always tell our volunteers why we are doing the work we are doing - why we are on our hands and knees pulling weeds. Everything is connected. Every action has a reaction. We have a long-term commitment to steward our lands to protect our exceptional lands and waters forever. As a community conservation project, the Buckthorn Blast creates a sense of place as we see we are making a significant difference in the landscape to the benefit of native species."
